

THE TEXT

“ I’m your wife, not your housekeeper ! ”

① Christine met Terry in 1991 when she was just divorced from her first husband. She was a single mum to Sarah, then 15, Robert, 13, and Laura, 9.

“He moved in with us and, although he worked hard, as a mechanic, he was more than willing to do his fair share of housework,” she recalls. “I had a job and we shared the cooking, cleaning and childcare. I felt lucky to have such a modern man.”

② A year after they married, in January 1992, Christine gave up her job as a classroom assistant and became a full-time housewife.

“ Suddenly, Terry stopped putting his dirty dishes in the sink... He also refused to help with the shopping and made unreasonable demands. He wanted tea every hour and his dinner at six sharp. He wouldn’t even let me vacuum because he hated the noise,” says Christine.

③ “ At first I thought he was tired but it soon became clear he was just being lazy. I was horrified when he told me that housework was women’s work, that he did his job during the day and didn’t expect to play housemaid at home,” she says.

④ Terry, who’s 39, says : “I love Christine but nothing could make me change again. It’s her job to stay at home and look after the kids. Some might say I have antiquated ideas – but I prefer to call them traditional.”
